By Leila Soussi

Ms. Soussi is a professor of mathematics and the mother of Alaa Abdel El Fattah, a political prisoner in Egypt.

CAIRO — Standing outside the Tora prison complex, where my son is held, a mother asks me: What's your son in for?

"Politics," I say.

She looks surprised, not because you can be imprisoned for politics — there's nothing strange about that in Egypt — but because most political prisoners are Islamists, and she doesn't think I look like the mother of an Islamist. "He was one of shabab al-thawra," I add, the young people of the revolution.

No further explanation is needed.

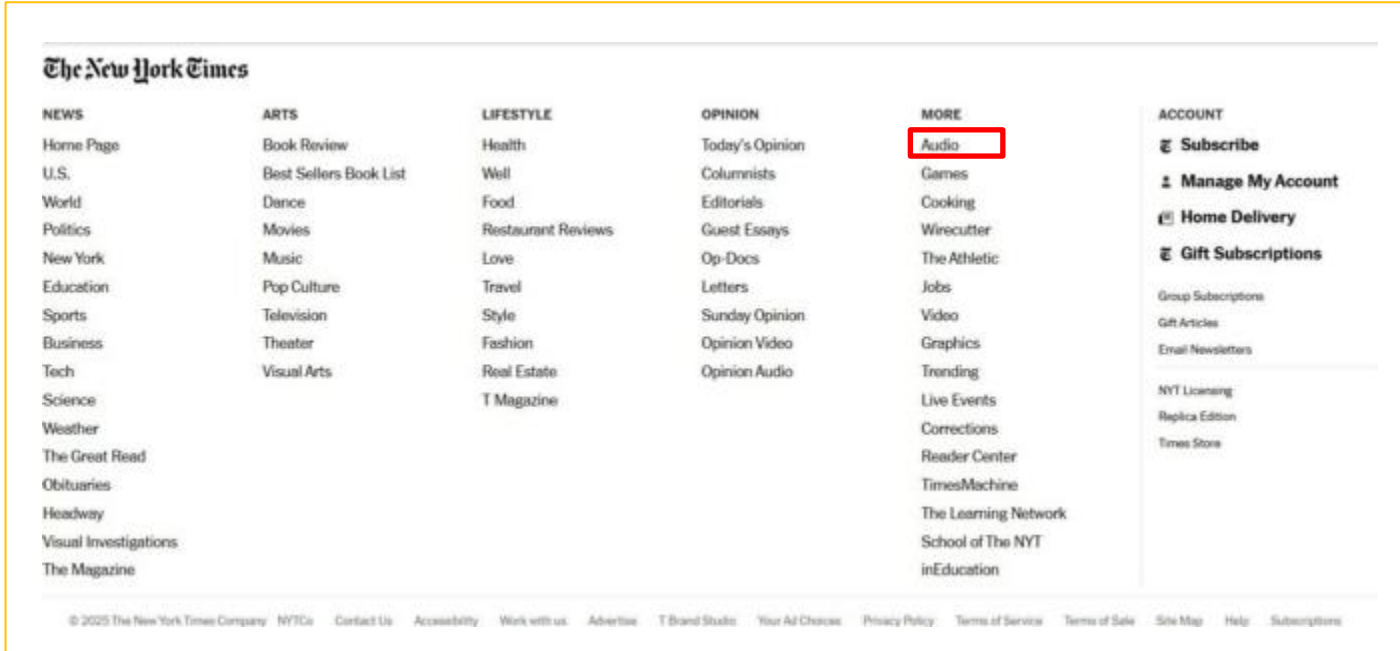

Why is my son, Alaa Abdel El Fattah, in prison? He is one of tens of thousands of political prisoners in Egypt. He has been there for more than seven years, across different governments, with little hope for a way out. He has stood trial many times and will be
